The Brooklyn City Co-operative Building and Loan Association held its annual election of officers last evening at the office on Court, near Schermerhorn street.
The polls opened at 7:15 o'clock and did not close for four hours. During that time the tellers were kept busy taking ballots.
Trouble has been brewing in the association for some time, and when a ticket was placed in nomination several days ago, the report was spread that it would be opposed at the polls. Joseph V. Sculley, who was substituted as president after Thomas F. Lewis had been deposed, sent out a postal card to the members, in which he said:

"The official ballot to be voted at this election can be had only at this office on the evening of election. No other ballot will be recognized.

"Voters must show book or certificate."

Mr. Lewis and his friends were not at all disconcerted over the threat of President Sculley not to recognize any but the regular ticket, for they promptly met and made up one of their own. It was headed by Lewis, and some thirty names were on the ballot for directors, of which fourteen names could be selected. The regulars turned out in force, and every person that entered the building was told as to how he should vote.

"Here's your ticket. Don't part with it to any one. They may try to give you another, but don't pay any attention to them. Be careful, for this is a most important matter to you, as well as to me."

These were a few of the expressions used by both sides. It appeared, however, as if every one had come prepared to vote.
The women seemed to take as much interest in the election as the men, for they appeared in large numbers. In fact, they stood in the doorway leading to the office of the company and did a little electioneering themselves. They had their favorite candidates, and some of them backed up their arguments with figures to show that the men they favored were really the only persons fitted to hold office.

President Sculley was in and about the building from the time the polls opened until they closed. He assured his friends that there was not a particle of doubt as to what would be the result.

While the administration of former President Lewis was attacked by some, yet there were others who seemed to think that Mr. Lewis was not responsible for the condition that prevailed. They argued that whatever he had done had to be passed upon by the Board of Directors.

In conversation with one of the members of the Association the reporter was told that since the row and the suspension of Lewis and Kampf over $80,000 had been drawn out.

The polls closed at 11 o'clock promptly.
At that hour it was stated that it would take at least three hours to count the ballots, on account of the scratching.

The result of the election follows: President, Joseph V. Sculley; vice-president, John G. Kehler; financial secretary, Joseph Cox; assistant financial secretary, John J. Dannaher; recording secretary, Joseph J. Money; treasurer, Thomas J.
Kelly; trustees, to serve eighteen months, William Gerber; directors, James J. Daly, Joseph H. Delany, John J. Foley, Denis Meagher, George W. Taylor, John O'Donnell, George N. Nelson, Frank P. Mooney, Henry Schwanwedel, Thomas Weldon, Henry Rohls, Michael J. Malone, Michael J. Sims, Benjamin T. Butterworth.

The Sculley-Delaney ticket won by 334 to 215 for the Lewis-Kampf ticket.
